

Indiana's telephone privacy law has greatly improved the quiet time at our household. Prior to being included on the privacy list we used to receive 5 to 10 calls per week. Sometimes the caller would call back several times after being told to remove our number from their list. My wife and I like Indiana's law the way it is. Please do not dilute it with a less effective federal alternative. Don't be purchased by these rich special interests. This is a right to privacy issue. This is not a free speech issue. If I want to be bothered by those sellers with whom I presently do business, I'll call them. They may continue to send me junk mail. If you insist on making a federal law, please do not preempt more protective state laws. The federal government is way too big. Don't you have enough to worry about without concerning yourselves with diluting Indiana's law?
